Can I put my website in this and have you analyze it?

Assistant

Absolutely. Send me the website URL, and I can analyze it for you.

I can look at things like:
- First impression & credibility
- Whether it clearly communicates what you do and who you help
- Your positioning as a hair-replacement/trichology consultant
- Homepage wording and calls-to-action
- Personal branding around Alan Humphreys
- Lead-generation and consultation funnels
- SEO and Google visibility
- Mobile-user experience
- Social-media integration
- Before/after photos, testimonials, and trust-building
- What could help convert visitors into consulting clients, salon/business clients, or virtual consultations

Since you're building this as your new consulting brand, I can also give you a page-by-page critique and specific replacement wording rather than just general suggestions.

Send me the URL.

User

Alanhumphreys.com

Assistant

Yes — I pulled up alanhumphreys.com, and there is quite a bit I can work with.

My first impression: the site already has a strong foundation, especially your personal story and the fact that you have experience as a client, owner, sales professional, trichologist, and consultant. That combination is probably your biggest differentiator.

The biggest opportunity I see

Right now the site is trying to communicate a lot of different things at once:
- Hair replacement consulting
- Virtual sales
- Traveling trichologist
- Virtual trichologist
- Sales training
- Business consulting
- Trichology training
- Speaking
- Content creation/podcasting

All of those are legitimate services, but a first-time visitor may not immediately know:
“Why should I hire Alan, and exactly what problem is he going to solve for me?”

Your story is actually much stronger than the current headline communicates. You went from being a hair-replacement client at 21, to working in the business, buying the company at 24, building it for decades, becoming an industry ambassador/model, adding trichology, and ultimately selling the company.

One change I'd seriously consider

Instead of leading primarily with:
“Hair Loss Solutions Expert”

I would build the brand around something closer to:
“Helping Hair Replacement & Trichology Businesses Grow”

Then underneath:
“28+ years of experience as a client, owner, sales professional, trichologist and industry consultant.”

That immediately tells a business owner who you help and what you do.

I also see a very good potential funnel

I would structure the site around three primary audiences:

1. Hair replacement business owners
2. Salons wanting to add hair-loss expertise
3. Industry/media/events

That would make the site feel much more focused without eliminating any of your services.

User

Do a full professional website audit of alanhumphreys.com

Assistant

I reviewed the live site page-by-page, including the homepage, About page, Gallery, Products, Blog, and the individual article structure.

My overall assessment

The raw material for your brand is very strong. The website is not yet presenting it as strongly as it could.

Your biggest asset isn't simply that you're a trichologist or that you have 28+ years in the industry.

It's this:

You were the customer first. Then you became the salesperson, business owner, industry ambassador, trichologist, and eventually sold the company you built.

That's a remarkably complete perspective. Your site tells that story, but it doesn't yet make that story the central positioning of the business.

I'd think of the site as approximately:

Story/credibility: 8.5/10
Service offering: 8/10
Brand positioning: 6.5/10
Conversion strategy: 6/10
Technical/content readiness: 5.5/10

Those aren't grades of you or your business—they're my assessment of how effectively the current website communicates what you have to offer.

1. THE BIGGEST ISSUE: WHO IS ALAN HUMPHREYS FOR?

Right now the homepage speaks to several different audiences:
- Hair-replacement companies
- Salon owners
- Hair-system wearers
- Trichology clients
- Sales teams
- People looking for training
- Event organizers
- Podcast/media opportunities

The homepage currently says:
“Virtual Hair Replacement & Trichology Sales Solutions for Salons & Hair Replacement Studios”

That's good information, but it doesn't immediately establish the Alan Humphreys category.

I would position you more like:

Alan Humphreys

Hair Replacement & Trichology Business Consultant

Helping hair-replacement companies, salons and trichology professionals grow through better sales, stronger client relationships and specialized hair-loss services.

28+ years as a client, owner, sales professional, industry ambassador and certified trichologist.

That tells the visitor immediately:
Who you are → Who you help → What you do → Why you're different.

2. YOUR PERSONAL STORY SHOULD BE YOUR BIGGEST MARKETING ASSET

This is the strongest part of the website.

The About page tells an unusually compelling story:
- Hair loss began at 18
- You became a client at 21
- You borrowed money for your first hair-replacement service
- You worked for the company
- You moved into sales
- You purchased the struggling business at 24
- You built Hair Vital
- You served 3,000+ clients

- You became an industry ambassador/model
- You appeared on Good Morning America
- You introduced trichology
- You sold the business in 2022
- You became certified as a clinical trichologist in 2026

That's excellent material.

But don't make people dig into the About page to discover why you're different.

Bring a condensed version of this story onto the homepage.

3. YOU HAVE A UNIQUE POSITIONING OPPORTUNITY

There's an important phrase buried in your story:

“I've lived every side of the chair.”

That could become the foundation of your brand.

I've Been on Every Side of the Chair.

As a client, I understand the fear.
As a salesperson, I understand the conversation.
As an owner, I understand the business.
As a trichologist, I understand the hair-loss side.
As a consultant, I help bring it all together.

That is substantially more distinctive than simply saying “Hair Loss Solutions Expert.”

4. YOUR HOMEPAGE HAS TOO MANY SERVICES

You currently have:
- Virtual consultations
- Sales training
- Trichology training
- Business strategy
- Speaking
- Content creation/podcast
- Virtual hair-replacement consulting
- Traveling trichologist
- Virtual trichologist

Nothing is inherently wrong with those services.

The problem is hierarchy.

I'd organize the business into three divisions:

A. BUSINESS GROWTH

For hair-replacement companies and salons.
- Sales consulting

- Lead conversion
- Sales training
- Business strategy
- Client retention
- Staff training

B. TRICHOLOGY

For salons and hair-loss professionals.
- Traveling trichologist
- Virtual trichology
- Salon assessment days
- Trichology implementation
- Trichology training

C. ALAN HUMPHREYS

Your personal brand.
- Speaking
- Podcasts
- Industry education
- Brand partnerships
- Content
- Media

5. THE THREE SERVICE MODELS ARE ACTUALLY VERY GOOD

I particularly like the three models currently described:
- Hair Replacement Virtual Consultant
- Traveling Trichologist
- Virtual Trichologist

The concepts are clear and commercially interesting.

But I'd make each one a standalone landing page.

For example:

/virtual-sales-consultant

Your virtual sales professional—without adding another full-time employee.

Then explain:
- Who it's for
- The problem
- How it works
- What Alan actually does
- What the salon/company provides
- What the client experiences
- Pricing structure or “starting at” if appropriate
- FAQ
- CTA

Same thing for Traveling Trichologist and Virtual Trichologist.

6. YOUR “VIRTUAL SALES CONSULTANT” OFFER COULD BE A VERY STRONG PRODUCT

This is one of the most interesting ideas on the entire site.

You're essentially saying:
“You don't have enough sales staff? I'll become an extension of your sales team.”

That's different from generic business consulting.

I'd make that extremely prominent.

Need a Sales Professional but Don't Need Another Employee?

I'll become an extension of your hair-replacement sales team.

You generate the lead.

I handle the consultation.

I speak with the prospect, answer the uncomfortable questions, explain the options, establish trust and help move the prospect toward the appropriate next step.

That's a productized service, rather than vague consulting.

7. YOUR TRICHOLOGY OFFER ALSO HAS A GREAT B2B ANGLE

Your traveling trichologist idea is smart because you're not asking salons to become trichologists.

You're saying:
“I'll bring the expertise into your business.”

For salon owners:
Add hair-loss expertise without hiring a full-time trichologist.

Then:
- You provide the space
- Alan provides the expertise
- Clients receive specialized assessment
- Salon maintains the client relationship
- Salon can identify clients who need additional hair-loss services

8. YOUR CREDENTIALS SECTION NEEDS A CLEANUP

There is an important credibility issue.

Your site alternates between:
28+ years
and 25+ years
and even:
30 years experience

in different sections.

I'd standardize everything to:

30+ Years in the Hair-Loss Industry

or

28+ Years of Professional Experience

Personally, I'd use:

30+ Years in the Hair-Loss Industry

because you're now in 2026 and your career began in 1994.

Then specifically state:
25 years as owner of Hair Vital

9. THE 3,000+ CLIENT NUMBER IS VERY VALUABLE

Keep this.

But I'd turn it into a more meaningful proof point:

30+

Years in the industry

3,000+

Clients served

25

Years as a business owner

Business built and sold

10. THE 92% RETENTION CLAIM NEEDS SUPPORT

Your blog headline currently says:
“Why Most Hair Studios Fail at Client Retention (And How We Built a 92% Loyalty Rate)”

That's potentially a fantastic credibility statistic.

But when someone clicks through, the article currently says that you maintained over 90% client retention and doesn't actually provide much supporting detail.

If you can substantiate the 92% figure, I'd turn it into a case study.

If you can't substantiate exactly 92%, I'd use “90%+” rather than a very precise statistic.

11. YOUR BLOG HAS THE RIGHT IDEA BUT NEEDS TO BECOME A LEAD GENERATOR

Your blog currently has four categories:
- Trichology & Scalp
- Studio Strategy
- Personal Journey
- Wearer Guide

That's a good structure.

But don't think of the blog as simply “articles.”

Think:

Alan's Knowledge Library

Every article should accomplish one of three things:

Attract

Google search traffic.

Establish

Your expertise.

Convert

Reader → consultation.

12. I WOULD CHANGE YOUR BLOG AUTHOR NAME

The article currently says:
“Alan Humphreys Admin”

That weakens the personal brand.

You want:

Alan Humphreys

Certified Trichologist | Hair Replacement Business Consultant

13. THE GALLERY PAGE IS A PROBLEM RIGHT NOW

The live Gallery page currently says:
“No Gallery Items Found”

A visitor shouldn't encounter an empty gallery on a professional consulting site.

Until it's populated:
Remove the Gallery from the main navigation.

Bring it back when you have:
- Before/after transformations
- Speaking photos
- GMA/media appearances
- Industry events
- Hair Vital history
- Trichology assessment images
- Training sessions
- Professional portraits

14. SAME PROBLEM WITH PRODUCTS

The Products page currently says:
“No products found in this category.”

I would remove Products from the navigation immediately unless you're actually going to sell or recommend products.

15. YOUR MEDIA CREDENTIALS SHOULD BE MUCH MORE PROMINENT

You have excellent credibility:
Good Morning America
New York Magazine
Details Magazine
Hair Visions International
American Hairlines
OnRite

I'd create a dedicated:

Media & Speaking

page.

16. YOUR PHOTOGRAPHY SHOULD FEEL MORE LIKE A PERSONAL BRAND

Because you are the product, photography matters enormously.

I'd want:
1. Authority — professional headshots
2. History — Hair Vital, industry events, GMA, catalog covers
3. Human — talking with clients, training people, traveling, speaking

17. YOUR CALL-TO-ACTION NEEDS TO BE MORE SPECIFIC

Instead of generic:
Book a Consultation
Book a Call
Start the Conversation

I'd use:
Business owner → Book a Business Strategy Call
Hair-replacement company → Explore Virtual Sales Support
Salon owner → Schedule a Trichology Assessment Day
Salon referring a client → Refer a Client
Speaker/event → Book Alan to Speak

18. I WOULD CHANGE THE CONTACT FORM

Your current form asks:
- First name
- Last name
- Email
- Phone
- Business type
- Primary interest
- Message

I'd make Business Type:
- Hair replacement business owner
- Salon owner
- Trichologist
- Hair-loss professional
- Industry manufacturer
- Individual experiencing hair loss
- Event/podcast organizer
- Other

And Primary Interest:
- Virtual sales support
- Business consulting
- Sales training
- Traveling trichology
- Virtual trichology
- Trichology training
- Speaking
- Podcast/media
- Other

19. YOUR WEBSITE NEEDS A STRONGER “WHY NOW?”

You tell people what you do.

But you can do a better job explaining why a business owner should contact you now.

For example:

Are you experiencing any of these?

- Leads aren't converting
- Staff aren't comfortable selling
- Your consultations feel inconsistent
- Existing clients aren't staying
- You're losing potential hair-loss clients to other providers
- You want to add trichology

- You can't justify a full-time sales professional
- You want to grow but don't know what to change

Then:

That's where I come in.

20. SEO: YOU HAVE A BIG OPPORTUNITY

Your current title is:
“Alan Humphreys — Hair Loss Solutions Expert, Consultant & Industry Innovator”

I'd make your search positioning more explicit.

Possible homepage SEO title:
Alan Humphreys | Hair Replacement Business Consultant & Trichologist

Possible target phrases:
- hair replacement business consultant
- hair replacement sales consultant
- hair replacement sales training
- trichologist consultant
- trichology consultant
- salon trichology services
- virtual trichologist
- hair replacement consultant
- hair system sales training
- hair loss business consultant

21. YOUR BLOG CAN BUILD GOOGLE AUTHORITY

Three content pillars:

BUSINESS

- How to increase hair replacement sales
- How to improve consultation conversion
- Hair replacement client retention
- How to train a hair replacement salesperson
- How to price hair replacement services
- Why hair replacement consultations fail
- How to start a hair replacement business

TRICHOLOGY

- What does a trichologist do?
- When should a salon refer a client to a trichologist?
- Hair thinning vs. hair loss
- Scalp assessment
- Hair-loss consultation
- How salons can add trichology

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE

- Why I became a hair replacement client
- How I bought my first business at 24
- What 25 years of ownership taught me
- What COVID taught me about running a hair business
- Why I sold Hair Vital
- What I would do differently if I started today

22. YOUR ABOUT PAGE SHOULD END WITH YOUR OFFER

After someone reads your story, immediately tell them:

Here's how I can help you.

If you're a hair-replacement business owner:
I can help with sales, staff, retention and growth.

If you're a salon owner:
I can help you add trichology without hiring a full-time specialist.

If you're an industry professional:
I can provide training, education and consulting.

Then three buttons.

23. YOUR BRAND SHOULD NOT LOOK LIKE A HAIR-LOSS CLINIC

You're not primarily selling hair replacement.

You're selling:

Experience + expertise + strategy + trust

I'd make the visual identity feel more like a high-end personal consulting brand than a hair clinic.

Think:
Alan Humphreys
rather than:
Alan Humphreys Hair Loss Center

24. I WOULD MAKE “ALAN HUMPHREYS” THE PRODUCT

Long-term architecture:

ALAN HUMPHREYS

Hair Replacement • Trichology • Business Growth

Consulting | Training | Speaking | Education

Everything supports the personal brand.

25. THE HOMEPAGE I'D BUILD

26. WHAT I WOULD FIX FIRST

Immediate

1. Remove the empty Gallery page
2. Remove the empty Products page
3. Standardize 25+/28+/30+ years
4. Change “Admin” to “Alan Humphreys”
5. Make your primary target customer clearer
6. Strengthen the homepage headline

Next

7. Create dedicated pages for your three major service models
8. Create a Media/Speaking page
9. Create actual case studies
10. Build a stronger consultation funnel
11. Improve the contact form
12. Add testimonials

Long-term

13. Build your personal brand around “every side of the chair”
14. Build YouTube/podcast content
15. Build an email list
16. Turn blog posts into lead magnets
17. Create downloadable resources for salon/business owners
18. Build a speaking/media kit

One thing I'd REALLY like you to consider

I don't think your website should primarily sell “consulting.”

That's too generic.

Your story gives you the ability to sell something much more compelling:

Real-world industry experience.

You aren't someone who read business books and decided to become a consultant.

You were a hair-loss client who became a salesperson, then bought a failing business at 24, built it for 25 years, served 3,000+ clients, worked with major industry companies, became a trichologist, and sold the business.

That's the brand.

The consulting is what you sell.

The experience is why people should listen to you.

Absolutely. Based on the current live homepage, I would keep much of your existing substance but reposition and rewrite it so the visitor understands you in about 10 seconds. Your current site already has the important ingredients—your client-to-owner story, 3,000+ clients, consulting, sales, trichology, media credentials, and three service models.

EXPERIENCE YOU CAN'T LEARN FROM A BOOK

30+ Years in the Hair-Loss Industry

3,000+ Clients Served

25 Years as a Business Owner

Business Built, Grown & Sold

I've experienced this industry from virtually every perspective—and that gives me a different understanding of the challenges you're facing.

I WAS A CLIENT BEFORE I BECAME THE EXPERT.

At 18, I started losing my hair.

At 21, I walked into a hair-replacement clinic as a client. I was so determined to find a solution that I had to borrow money just to make the deposit.

That experience changed my life.

When I couldn't afford to pay off the balance, the owner offered me a job as a telemarketer. I quickly moved into sales, eventually finding an investor and purchasing the company myself at just 24 years old.

I didn't have a business degree.

I didn't have years of management experience.

I didn't have money of my own.

I had something else:

I understood what it felt like to sit on the other side of the desk.

Over the next 25 years, I built Hair Vital into a successful hair-replacement business serving more than 3,000 clients.

I became a brand ambassador and model for leading industry companies, appeared on Good Morning America, and was featured in Details Magazine and New York Magazine.

I also introduced trichology services to my business, becoming one of the first companies in Colorado to offer them.

After selling Hair Vital in 2022, I began the next chapter of my career:

Helping other professionals build better businesses.

YOUR BUSINESS DOESN'T ALWAYS NEED MORE LEADS.

Sometimes it needs better conversations.

A lead is only the beginning.

What happens during the consultation can determine whether someone becomes a client—or walks away.

That's where experience matters.

I help hair-replacement companies, salons and hair-loss professionals improve the way they connect with prospects, conduct consultations, handle objections, build trust and turn opportunities into long-term relationships.

HOW I CAN HELP

Business Growth

Turn Experience Into a Business Strategy

Implementation notes

Make “I've Been on Every Side of the Chair” the central creative idea of the homepage.

Don't put every service above the fold. The first screen should sell you and your unique experience.

Your current site says 28+ years in several places but the footer says 25+ years. Before publishing, settle on one consistent number. Based on the history documented, use “30+ Years in the Hair-Loss Industry” while specifically describing “25 years as a business owner.”

Most importantly, don't make this website feel like you're trying to sell five different businesses. Make Alan Humphreys the brand, and make consulting, sales, trichology, training, speaking and education the ways people can work with you.
